

PUBLIC SCHOOL HEAD ADDRESSES EDUCATION BODY

Superintendent of Somerset
Public Schools Talks at Final Meet

McVEY PRESIDES AT CONCLUDING SESSION

Hill, Martin, Brookes, Other
Speakers at Tenth
Assembly

"We must realize that education is a function and a responsibility of the state, administered on the lower levels by the state through local school units as the state's agents; and on a higher level through state institutions of higher learning, also agents of the state," declared P. H. Hopkins, superintendent of Somerset public schools, in the final address of the Tenth Annual Education conference, which convened October 27 and 28 at Memorial hall.

Dr. Frank L. McVey presided at the final session and introduced Mr. Hopkins. An organ prelude was played by Mrs. Lela M. Cullis. The conference, which was called for the purpose of discussing mainly the findings and recommendations of the Kentucky Educational commission, concluded with a satisfactory attendance. Officials and sponsors expressed their gratification at the attendance and interest.

Other speakers at the session were Dr. H. H. Hill, superintendent of Lexington public schools; Dr. James W. Martin, bureau of business research of the University; and J. W. Brooker, director of the department of buildings and grounds of the state department of education.

In his speech on "School Costs," Doctor Hill pointed out the increase in school cost during the past few decades, and attributed it to the fact that in 1930 there were 70,000 high school boys and girls enrolled in Kentucky as compared to 14,000 in 1910; that an literacy reduction of 25 per cent had been made; that the former teacher was only a high school graduate while now he had two years of college training; that the average school term is 40 days longer than in 1920; and finally, that the state now has four well equipped teachers' colleges and a modern state university. He urged that all educators take a militant attitude, and closed with the statement that "the greatest cost Kentucky can pay for the depression would be an educationally impoverished generation of children."

Doctor Martin, who spoke on "Financial Support of Education," discussed the proposed amendment which will be voted on in the November election, authorizing the legislature to repeal the state tax on certain classes of property. He pointed out the fact that if this amendment is passed, the per capita funds distributed by the department of education will decline to a point between $2 and $3 per child, and that such a reduction would not only deal a severe blow to the progress of education in Kentucky but would also greatly effect the program which the educational commission has adopted.

Mr. Brooker, discussing "School Buildings and Grounds," presented his talk in the form of a report of the subcommittee on school buildings and grounds. He recommended the consolidation of as many rural schools as possible and the rebuilding of the small school which could not be dispensed with.

Doctor McVey, in a closing talk, expressed the hope that a jubilee meeting of men and women interested in educational progress could be held next fall in Lexington in celebration of the 1934 legislature's approval of the recommendations of the commission.

MEN'S GLEE CLUB GIVES PROGRAMS

Musical Organization Sings
Between Halves at Kentucky-Duke Game; Entertains at Conference

The University of Kentucky men's glee club entertained the tenth annual educational conference at the Lafayette hotel Friday night, October 27. Between the halves of the Kentucky-Duke football game they entertained in conjunction with the band the 10,000 fans present.

At the educational conference the glee club sang "The Bells of Saint Mary's," and "When Your Head Am Bowed with Troubles," a negro spiritual. As an encore they sang the new pep song, based on the octave scale, which was introduced on the campus this year. The words were written by Virginia Boyd, and the music by Harrison Elliott, a student in the music department. Mr. Elliott has written 40 songs and marches.

Between halves at the Kentucky-Duke game, Saturday, the 40 singers snake-danced out on the field along side the band. They then proceeded to the Duke side of the field and sang the Duke "Battle Song," the U. K. band chiming in on the second chorus. After this friendly gesture, the band and glee club marched to the south side of the field, where the singers presented Kentucky's own "Alma Mater."

PRESS FREEDOM IS CELEBRATED

American Newsmen Observe
200th Anniversary of Journalism at
Mt. Vernon

ZENGER ACT RECALLED

The 200th anniversary of American Journalism was celebrated at Mt. Vernon, New Jersey, Sunday, October 29. It was on this day, 200 years ago, that John Peter Zenger, reporting a colonial assembly election, was arrested and tried in the same church in which the election took place, for seditious libel to colonial authority.

Zenger was acquitted in this church in East Chester, called St. Paul, which still stands, a monument to the freedom of the press. Colonel Robert R. McCormick of the Chicago Tribune, speaking before several hundred editors and publishers, and descendants of colonial families who settled this Hudson river country-side, urged the press of America to follow in Zenger's steps.

Linking the right of a free press with the forthcoming NRA code for newspapers, the Chicago editor declared: "American Journalism does not wish to triumph over anybody. We only wish to be assured that our rights, so hardily won and so hardily preserved, are not being destroyed."

Rare Collection Of Art Featured At U.K. Library

By VIRGINIA ROBINSON

Not at the Chicago Century of Progress, not in the Philadelphia Art museum, not in the galleries of Paris—but right on the University of Kentucky campus, on the main floor of the library, is the exhibition that isn't—"just another exhibition."

It is the result of many, many hours spent in collecting, arranging, and re-arranging, and collecting—all because Mr. Bernard Lemann, the new art instructor, conceived the idea of producing, for the benefit of his classes, an illustrated example of the processes used in lithography, engraving, etching, print-making, wood-cutting, mezzotint, and aquatint.

Most of us have little knowledge of these methods, so realizing this fact, Mr. Lemann borrowed and brought forth his own implements, or sketches of them, employed in bringing about the results of the above processes. The use of each implement is fully explained on an adjoining typewritten card so that anyone may fully understand how each picture in the exhibition was made.

Come and see a cut and the actual etching printed from it; come and see original drawings by Duer the famous French artist; come and observe the many different courses of the lines in such pictures as Millet's famous depiction of "The Gleaners"; the simple, yet beautiful "Coast of Holland" by Jongkind; or von Rigin's interpretation of "The Crucifix." Come and gaze enviously through a microscope at an enlarged example of the only steel cut production remaining in the United States—that of the good ole dollar bill.

If none of these arouse your interest, then come and see many personally collected originals by Miss Alva Stratton, the charming young artist who painted the background of the set for the first scene in the Guignol production "When Ladies Meet." Miss Stratton is now a student at the University, and is studying under Mr. Lemann in the art department.

So just amble over to the library, and impress yourself with your appreciation of art. The queer part about it is that if you stay long enough you'll begin to really appreciate it without even trying.

SPANISH CLUB TO MEET

El Ateneo Castellano, Spanish club, will meet at 3 p. m. Thursday in the Women's building. An interesting program has been prepared and all members are urged to be present.

Fowler Selects Cast for Second Play of Season

Guignol Theater to Present
"Mrs. Moonlight" Week of November 20

By T. J. ROPKE

Benn Levy's successful play, "Mrs. Moonlight," will open November 20 as the Guignol theater's second production of the season. The cast, which is made up of eight players, is a much-seasoned one although only three have appeared here before.

The leading role, that of Sarah Moonlight, is to be played by Dunster Foster Pettit, who has been seen here in the productions of "Holiday" and "Berkeley Square." The part was made famous in New York by Edith Barrett.

Minnie is to be played by Eleanor Parker Hopkins who is widely known as a lecturer on period furniture and costumes. Although this is her first adventure on the stage, she was at one time connected with the moving picture industry in the research line.

Dorothy Dyer Rhodes will make her debut to the Guignol patrons in the role of Edith Moonlight.

Jane Moonlight will be played by the star of "Mid-Summer Night's Dream," Marjorie Powell. Miss Powell is well-known about town as a dancer, and has taken parts in two other Guignol productions, "The Circle" and "The Critic."

Paul W. Mathews, supervisor of public school music for Lexington, will be introduced to the little theater stage as Thomas Moonlight. Mr. Mathews is a native of Lexington but has spent the past several years in Louisville and Knoxville.

Percy Midding will be played by Howard Smathers. Mr. Smathers has appeared in the productions of "A Mid-Summer Night's Dream," and "Alas! Poor York."

Oliver Williamson, a recent graduate of the University, will play the role of Willie Raggs. This will be Mr. Williamson's first work at the theater. James Alsop, who just entered school this year, will play the part of Peter Midding.

Much is expected of this play after the showing of the players in their first production, "When Ladies Meet." The season's opener played to capacity crowds during the entire week, and Director Fowler predicts an equal success for the Levy play.

Powerful Wademen Quick to Take Advantage of Every Break

KENTUCKY'S OFFENSE
IS BEST THIS SEASON

Kercheval, Wagner, and Frye
Play Stellar Football for Big Blue

By DELMAR ADAMS

Outgained, outfought and outplayed, but taking advantage of every break, Wallace Wade's Duke Blue Devils aided by their tutor's 13-year-old jinx over Kentucky, defeated the Wildcats 14-7 Saturday afternoon in the fourth meeting between the two teams.

Displaying their best offense of the season, the 'Cats played great throughout and only two fumbles kept them from defeating or tying the powerful horde of Devils. The Duke aggregation, heralded as a Rose Bowl team, failed to show power except when they received breaks which enabled them to get the ball close to the goal line.

The visitors scored their first touchdown which was practically a gift in the opening minutes of the struggle. Kentucky received the ball and punted after one play. Duke returned the punt to the 'Cat 14-yard stripe, where "Pug" Bach fumbled and Wentz, Duke end, recovered. On three plays the Devils went to the two-yard line from which point Cox went through on a spinner for the score and Corky Cornelius added the extra point.

The remainder of the opening quarter was a punting duel between Laney and Kercheval. Far from being discouraged, that touchdown seemed to irritate the Big Blue and soon after the second period began, they started a go-ahead drive. With the ball resting on their 29-yard line, the Blue and White moved down the field on runs by Kercheval, Pritchard, and McMillan to put the ball on the Duke 17-yard line. Kercheval faded back and tossed a pass far over into the end-zone and little Johnny Frye leaped into the air at the extreme end of the zone and took the ball for the 'Cat touchdown. Kercheval added the extra point via the placement route.

The first touchdown failed to satisfy the appetite of the 'Cats for Duke blood and they repulsed all Duke attempts to advance the ball and started another drive with the oval resting on their 44-yard mark. This time they did not get so far and with the ball on Duke's 38-yard line and three to go, Joe Rupert dropped back and hurled a long overhead thrust to Captain "Dutch" Kreuter who had just replaced Frye. "Dutch" just missed the ball by inches as he stepped over the goal line. From our point of view it appeared that the Duke safety man interfered with the 'Cat captain causing him to stumble and lose the ball.

The rest of the second quarter was uneventful but the 'Cats began their assault anew as the third period got under way. With Bob Pritchard slicing through the "great" Freddie Crawford, so-called all-American possibility, the Wildcats drove from their own 27-yard line to the enemy 31 before they lost the ball after two passes failed.

Duke then started an attack of their own, and swept down the field to the one-yard line. Here the Big Blue forewarned rose up and stopped the enemy and the 'Cats were saved for the time being. Kercheval, kicking from behind the goal, booted the ball 49 yards in the face of two giant linemen who were coming at him like an avalanche. Then the jinx, which up to that moment had not been very much in evidence, stepped in and took a hand in the proceedings.

Hendrickson, Devil safety, fumbled a punt; the Cat ends tried to recover but the elusive Duke back (Continued on page Four)

"DADDY"

Death again stalked across the campus Saturday night, claiming "Daddy" Newman, professor of civil engineering in the College of Engineering. Professor Newman passed away after an illness of several weeks, during which time he gamely fought for life.

Being actively connected with the civil engineering department of the College of Engineering, "Daddy" was widely known among the student body for his personality, kindness and foresight. He was a personal friend to those students who sought his advice and counsel on diverse problems. He will join his friend, "Jack" Hickey on the road to the eternal life.

The Kernel extends the sympathy of the student body to Professor Newman's family. We will miss him, too.

SOBER YOUTH

Present indications point to the ultimate discarding of the Eighteenth Amendment. It is likely that by the end of November the three states needed to insure repeal will have voted in favor of it. Die-hards who are bitterly opposed to any retreat from strict prohibitionism have made constant use of the stock argument that it will result in more "wildness" in the ranks of "flaming youth."

The fixed idea of some older people that all young people are headed for perdition as old as history. Our primitive ancestor, the cave man, probably viewed the antics of his off-spring with alarm and apprehension. In his dull mind, the time-worn phrase, "What is the younger generation coming to?" or an equivalent question must have originated. The literature of the past, from antiquity to our own times, reflects that pessimism concerning the fate of youth.

To the contention of prohibitionists that repeal will make flaming youth flame higher, we counter with a question, "Is there such a thing as flaming youth in present day society?" Comparison of the younger generation with the generation now approaching middle age shows that it is the latter who feel the necessity for defiance of conventions in order to regain the spirit of their lost youth. It is not always the very young who are "wild," but some are those who feel the shackles of age closing about them.

Persons who point with apprehension to the youth of today as those most likely to be demoralized by legal use of liquor are, to use a trite expression, "barking up the wrong tree." Modern young people have seen the world shaken by two catastrophes—the World War and the world-wide depression. They are beginning to see with clear eyes. They suspect that the condition of the world is the result of blunders committed by their elders. The fallacy of the idea that only age and wisdom go hand in hand has been revealed to them.

Young men and women know that the fate of civilization rests with youth as youth, not as the men and women they will be when they grow older. With casual observation, they see that their contemporaries are shouldering the burdens so long carried by their elders and are attempting to work out solutions left to them as heritage.

Consciousness that the affairs of the world are in a perplexing condition has sobered the thinking youth of today. They have become "old young men"—old in that they see things as they are, not through the roseate glow of sentimental idealism.

Considering the fact that the imbibing of intoxicating liquors has not been decreased by prohibition, it is unlikely that repeal will lead to less temperance. However, if it has any undesirable effects at all, youth will not be responsible.

THE UNIVERSITY BULLETIN

The first issue of the Bulletin, official publication of the University of Kentucky, was published in 1918. The Bulletin, which is published every Friday, includes brief announcements of meetings which will be held, and events that have been scheduled to take place on the University campus. Mimeographed copies of the University Bulletin are sent each week to the offices of the faculty members of the University; to local newspapers; out of town newspapers; school papers, and to The Kentucky Kernel.

The announcements appearing in the Bulletin are all authentic, coming directly from the various offices and departments of the University. Announcements should be sent to the bulletin, Mary Chick, Jane M. Hamilton and Virginia Bosworth in care of the Journalism department.

Keep the good work up.

A PRACTICAL IDEA

Women of the University, a new field has been opened to you. On Friday night, a Young Women's Democratic club was organized at the University. At the same meeting a Young Men's club was organized and the organizations will work together on many questions. The meeting held Friday night was officially a "smoker." Not only is the idea of women in politics comparatively new, but also that of a smoker being opened to them presented a novel idea.

Since the depression, government has become an ever current topic of conversation. People, who no longer have everything they are accustomed to, are inquiring as to the reason for this, and are appealing to their government to procure these things for them. They do not realize that it is because of their neglect of the government when they had no particular need of it, has brought them into the current situation. When they had money to throw away, they did not bother about what amounts the government took from them, or how it was used.

Now someone must be blamed for the present state of affairs so people blame the government, forgetting that they have always had the privilege of taking part in it, but have neglected this duty. The older people who should have been looking after our affairs have made of them a heretofore unequalled tangle. Perhaps many of them did not know just how to bring about what they wanted. The women, especially, were inexperienced in using their privileges as citizens.

In a few years, most of us will have our chance to see what we can do about the country. Will we be as our parents have been and continue to take part blindly or not at all, or will we learn to manage our affairs so that they will reflect to our credit—and to our welfare? Here on the campus we have a chance to learn the science of government not only in theory, but in practice. It certainly behooves all of us to take part in this movement and become proficient in that branch of modern life which plays such a vital part in the country.

Surely no college course should be complete which turns its students loose with no practical knowledge of how to assist in running their country.

"THE BEST BAND IN DIXIE"

Many have been the compliments which have been heaped upon the band and glee club since Saturday for their excellence in executing the formations at the Duke game.

We believe that the majority of students and townspeople realize and appreciate the long hours of work necessary for the successful performing of these maneuvers. We also feel that the people in the stands should be complimented on the rapt attention with which they received the choruses of the glee club at the half. It would have been nothing short of a tragedy if the fans had appeared oblivious of this organization's first appearance at a football game. This group certainly should be encouraged to appear in company with the band at future games.

The band is somewhat smaller this year, and with a large per cent of first year men it has been necessary to put in more than the usual number of hours for the perfection of the formations. The group meets three times a week. The first hour is spent in rehearsing the music to be used, and the second hour (quite often extended to an hour and a half) is devoted to drill.

Moreover, the band has had a change of regime this fall, which newness caused some difficulty at first in spite of all attempts to prohibit this. Lieutenant Criswell and his staff have control of the organization during the drill period. The lieutenant was determined not to utilize any formations that had already been worked out in the past, and so doubtless spent some sleepless nights figuring out ways and means of forming the band on the field. Many times changes had to be made when they were put in practice, and thus it became necessary for more time to be expended. But in the end it appears that things have worked out to the best advantage.

Some years ago the band acquired a reputation, that of being the "best band in Dixie," that has taken some real striving to maintain. Nevertheless, we believe that it has maintained it and that it will continue to do so in the future.

CAN YOU KNIT?

The most recent fad to appear on the campus is knitting. Enter nearly any lecture room and you will find four out of five of the co-eds playing their needles for dear life, we say nearly any, because a few of the professors have had the courage to refuse to compete with the clicking of the needles—and have demanded that the knitting be given up rather than the lecture.

This knitting, if hung upon a line, would resemble a very modern rainbow. New and lovely shades are being offered, and one need not knit just a "red sweater" or a "blue sweater"—the obvious things that knitters have been making for years—but may choose different, subtle shades, such as taupe, bottle green, and rust.

However, we are not trying to increase the ranks of the knitters, but rather to point out that from the most trivial sort of thing, valuable lessons may be learned. Do not immediately cease reading this because you think you will sooner or later run across a moral, because we mean to introduce it very gently and take you unaware.

When one is knitting, it is quite common to discover that three or four rows behind one has made a mistake, either dropped a stitch or tangled up several threads. Sometimes it is so far behind that one is tempted to overlook it and go on. Perhaps the garment will be completed without further mistakes, and it is very proudly taken off and admired. However, the mistake is still there, and the more perfect the garment is otherwise, the more glaring the fault is. An otherwise perfect piece of work is ruined or marred because someone was too careless or lazy to take out her mistake.

So it is with life. We go along so far, and then we find that we have made a mistake. Perhaps we have adopted the wrong attitude towards something, or maybe we have jumped to a conclusion and later found out that we were wrong. Many of us are too lazy or careless to try to undo whatever our mistake was. We let it slide along, until finally we find that we have gone too far to correct it—for the farther we go in both knitting and life, the more difficult it is to undo what we have done. Perhaps it would have been quite simple at the time it was done or soon after-

LITERARY

conducted by JANE ANN MATTHEWS

Conscious of the tendency of students in their enthusiasm for time-reading to pass over many good books of recent but not "latest" publication, I am publishing in this column a review of "Count Luckner" by Lowell Thomas. This book, besides finding favor with grown-ups, is especially interesting for young people. It was in fact selected by a Detroit high school as the outstanding first rank biography for young people. If you have read the book read the review, it will be fun to recall the story, if you haven't read the book read the review, you might like to read the book. "Count Luckner" is in circulation at the University library.

SUNSET

I'm watching the sun set and deep in my heart
I'm feeling the longing that can not depart
Until I find somewhere the words to reveal
All the joy and the courage, the love that I feel.
I must pour those words into heart,
Or the people whose eyes and whose souls now are blind,
I'll paint such a picture, so they too will know
Rays of hope from those colors, no artist can show.
Their eyes will be opened, and then they will see
How near is the woman or man they would be.
Dear God, I am praying, I'm asking you now
For words to express it so they'll know, somehow.
Oh God, let me tell them before I shall die
Or the message you send, when the sun leaves the sky.

Count Luckner: "The Sea Devil" by Lowell Thomas.
(Reviewed by Jane Winslow)
In an account thrilling as any old tale of privateering days, Lowell Thomas recaptures the glamour and romance of the sea in his stirring biography of Count Luckner, better known as the Sea Devil. His daring, his never to be forgotten cunning, his grim determination to succeed in breaking the English blockade, his gallant sea-faring ways make this book excellent entertainment.

Wafted on a sea foam of adventure, the reader is carried back to that thrilling episode of the World War in 1916 when Great Britain sought to bar Germany's path to the sea with a fleet in the Channel, the North Sea, and the Atlantic. Then it is that the rollicking adventure starts, as Count Luckner takes command of an old but sea worthy American clipper, one of that magnificent breed of full rigged ships that has disappeared from ocean lanes. Completely disguising her in a Norwegian garb, even to the engines, pictures in the cabins, victrola records, and the sailors' love letters from the girls they left behind them, the Sea Devil is prepared to meet all British questions, in readiness for inspection from the enemy. Appearing to be only an innocent sailing vessel, this Seadiver is in reality a mass of tricks. The dining saloon is an elevator which can be sent down to the hold by pressing a button, in order that a British prize crew peacefully sitting at dinner might have the pleasure of finding themselves surrounded by armed men. In the officers' closets are trap doors, rifles, and naval uniforms concealed in hollow spars, guns under the false deck houses, and to make the program complete, one of the crew was trained to become at a moment's notice the fair Josefeena, the captain's wife. When her big feet were nestled under a steamer rug, her jaw bound up because of a tooth ache, she would make a deceiving spectacle even to keen-eyed Britishers.

Twenty-five millions worth of Allied shipping, Count Luckner is able to sink in the Mediterranean and South Atlantic, not to mention searing hundreds of neutral ships into port, and sending insurance rates sky high. This jolly Sea Devil makes the British, French and Italian prisoners his guests, treating them to the best fare the ship could offer in food, entertainment, and quarters. Incidentally in all his captures he never killed a single man. Surely he may be deemed the perfect knight!

In a style touched with sea tang and savoring of the sailor's life, Lowell Thomas has admirably portrayed a character which the world has long been curious about. Not a single page is dull, and nearly every one contains a genuine chuckle. Perhaps no book has more real thrills, more mischief, more laughs and more romance included in one volume than does this biography of Count Luckner.

What is there about me now, my dear, that makes you
Close and bar doors about you when I enter?
Has my coming suddenly brought a chill wind, or
Have I somehow trespassed upon silent halls?
Your lips still smile, but your eyes are dark;
Your hand still stretches forth in welcome,
But your voice seems oddly faltering, strained.
I have not changed...for me the nights are still Glorious in their fall splendor, and stars are Still as bright, as sparkling, as ever. Somehow I Think that I am still living in the days of fall,
And you...well, you are already in the winter.
—DAVID.

Students Converse on Steps

Eds and Co-eds Discuss Week-end Experiences Monday Morning Between Classes

By STARR MENDEL

The feeling is intense! The sweat stands on many a brow! Someone has just told a seemingly unbreakable secret!

Anguished foreheads are furrowed as a dozen acute minds, keyed to the highest point, struggle vainly with the mighty task of bringing forth a bigger and better story. The tension is almost unbearable! Something is bound to snap. Suddenly the silence is pierced by the ringing of a bell! And the completely fatigued students file silently to class. The above little drama ladies and gentlemen, is enacted almost any balmy morning on the middle steps of Science building. Why the middle steps are chosen no one knows. Tradition, perhaps has made it so.

All that you need is a slight basis of fact, a fertile imagination, a great deal of experience, and a gift wards to go back and do it over the correct way, but very soon too much has happened as a result of it to allow us any other course than to go ahead.

So it behooves us all to be willing to admit mistakes at once. A stubbornness to do this hurts no one but ourselves in the long run. Let us watch our life's fabric as we construct it, and if we find that we have made a faulty stitch, let us immediately admit it and correct it.

Jest Among Us

Now that all of our University co-eds have seen Mae West's latest movie, they will know just how to conduct themselves until her next one is released.

And then there was the college wit who said that the name of this column should be changed to "Jest Among Us."

The fact that a certain sports scribe has been seen lately with only one key dangling from his container can be explained by the recently published statement which said that no great man ever carried more than five keys.

Scandal Snickerings

The THREE DIRT DIGGERS

The Three Dirt Diggers having been assigned to this column have put in a week's concentrated digging, and have the following to offer you. They might not be as good as that which our pal the Coffman wrote but bear with us.

The news has just come to us of the marriage of Elizabeth Evans, Kappa Iota and Rice Smith, official Sigma Nu pinner. It seems Deane the Blandings pursued them in the wee hours, but we don't know whether she nabbed them or not. What is this, a marriage epidemic? Well one more Sigma Nu has bitten the dust for the last time.

The Big Blue turned sissy and was suffering from a campus last week for not winning the W. & L. game. We suppose now they will have their social privileges jerked. Tsh. Tsh. Too bad, all you courties of the pigskin carriers.

One of the new organizations on the campus is known as the NBSA. Translated it means, "Nobody But Squatters Allowed." They work under the NRA code. The club was instigated and organized by the Kappas and the Southern Gentlemen (in case you don't know of any on the campus they are supposed to be the Kays!). The chief organizers being Betty Ann Pennington, Rissa Hieronymous, Cook Goodson, Frank (Honey) Pantis, Caywood, Joe Goodson, and Leslie Betz. We have investigated but can find no reason for the club existing except to give the girls a chance to compete for the campus twit. Stoddard Pickrell. Say what has this guy got? The girls seem to be running neck in neck in the competition.

One of the 31 Chio pledges handed in her pledge button. What's the matter? Wonder if she was looking for a quality and found quantity. The little lady is June Farleigh, Sigmachi pinnette.

The pin question is here again—the new romance is that of Birdie Bosworth and Kappasig Hunt Thomas.

Speaking of your romances which have survived the summer, one of the better which has not been given any publicity is that of Kappa Kitty Reynolds and Kay Dutch Wilhoit.

Seen and heard about: After a summer on the railroad tracks the "blond blizzard" Frye of the Three D stables, seems to have lost her strange power over the men...Marjorie Fleber is reported to be the

She looks adorably at Jack Hirsch, Delt lab prof. Alphagam pledge, Katy Gover and the pride of Pulaski county, seen surrounded by three attentive eds. Those seen were DU Miles Hardin, Phidelt, Billy Baldwin and Louis Finley. While the cat's away the mice will play, Sigmachu Fuzzy Evans and Chio pinette Marie Vernon. Catch on??? Completely in keeping with the latest trend of backstage comedy in the current musical films is the Kentucky's version of the stage musical comedy that played for 52 weeks on Broadway, and which is currently playing in Chicago with Gisen and Johnson in the comedy parts.

In this picture the four featured players are, James Dunn, June Knight, Lillian Roth and Cliff Edwards, while the supporting cast is made up of Lillian Bond, Dorothy Lee, Lona Andree and Charles "Buddy" Rogers. "Take a Chance" is the story of four carnival entertainers who come to New York, and in the process of winning fame and fortune find Broadway really isn't different from Main street. They pass through many hectic adventures which carry them backstage, into a crooked gambling hall, and finally to the homes of New York's socially elite.

If the popularity of past numbers is any criterion, the most successful group of composers ever to work together on a picture have collaborated in writing the lyrics of this film. They are responsible for no less than five numbers, of which, at least, three should be hits. They are: "I Did It With My Little Ukulele" written by Harburg and Arlen, the latter the composer of "Stormy Weather"; "Should I Be Sweet" written by Buddy De Sylva and sung by June Knight; "Eadie Was a Lady," with new lyrics by Lawrence Schwab and sung by Lillian Roth; and "New Deal Rhythm," written by Harburg and Gorney and sung by Buddy Rogers and danced by the chorus.

The first part of the week the Ben All is presenting "Lady for a Day," a story about an old apple seller's love for her daughter who believes her a society dowager.

May Robson as Apple Annie gives a well-nigh perfect performance. Her drunk scene with the social chatter is splendid. Warren William, Guy Kibbee, Ned Sparks and Glenda Farrell, as the smart crackling lowlives who play fairy godmother, are grand. Jean Parker is the romantic element.

Considered from the rational and unsentimental side this picture may seem a lot of hokey, but, nevertheless, it is the kind of hokey that makes the movies and a good part of the world go round. You'll scream with delight when the ruffian prepare to impersonate quality folks at the reception; you'll thrill with suspense at the arrival of the real guests; and you will surely be moved by the drama in the final triumph of Annie.

The other comedy, "Melody Cruise," of the first part of this week is being shown for the last time today at the Strand. This story, which concerns the girl troubles of playboy Charles Ruggles, is thoroughly enjoyable and completely funny.

Great, even in defeat. A homely and overworked phrase, but it describes perfectly the present status of the Wildcats after Saturday's battle with Duke. Touted by the sports writers to be "hills wonders" and no match for Duke, the Cats showed as good an offense as the Blue Devils, and in our opinion were fully a match for the Devils had it not been for the persistent and ever-present jinx of Wallace Wade over Kentucky.

Coach Harry Gamage was satisfied with the performance of his charges and attributed the loss to the bad breaks which came to the Big Blue. The Wildcats played a superb game and staged three goalward marches that were all but successful each time.

Bud Davidson and Frank Wagner both played outstanding games, completely overshadowing the performance of Freddie Crawford, the so-called wildman and All-American of Duke. Crawford was good, but to voice the opinion of the Cats, if he is an All-American, then nearly all of the Cat linemen deserve such an honor.

Ralph Kercheval played a great game, not only doing his usual brilliant kicking, but passing superbly and turning in a fine running game. "Big Bob" Pritchard was the most consistent ball carrier on either team, and never failed to gain each time he toted the oval.

Those downtown newspaper men who criticized the student body for their lack of interest received full proof Saturday that they were wrong. The cheering of the students and Kentucky supporters was the best of the season and lacked for nothing. It was good and we are proud of the boys and girls who supported the team in defeat. The Cat supporters did not expect a victory and were well pleased with the showing of the team against the supposedly unbeatable Duke legions.

Kentucky has found herself and the team is just beginning to function. The sophomores are beginning to get the hang of just how big time football should be played, and the veterans have come out of their slump and the entire squad is clicking. There is no alibi for the defeat Saturday. Two breaks or bad plays, whichever you desire to call them, gave Duke the victory.

As usual, in bowing to Duke, the Cats made more first downs, completed more passes, and gained more yards from scrimmage than the Devils did. They made 12 first downs; Duke made six. In yards gained the Cats had only a slight majority over their opponents, 218 yards to 207. Never have the Devils been able to gain as much or to score as many first downs as the Kentuckians, but they have always won.

Sunny Day, auburn-haired member of the U. K. band, was recently taken for a member of the Salvation Army. While walking down the street a lady came out of a house and gave him some clothes and other articles for the use of the "Army." Mr. Day refused the honor, however, and maintained he was not a member of the preaching corps, but a horn tooter.

The Big Blue will run into another All-American hopeful this week-end when they play the Tide, in the person of Tom Hupke, Crimson guard. His exhibitions against Fordham and Tennessee stamp him as one of the greatest guards in the nation.

Duke Defeats Cats By Score of 14-7

(Continued from Page One) recovered it on the first bounce and got away to return it to the 28-yard-stripe. On the next play Cornelius stepped through the 'Cat line, reversed his field, and was not halted until three Wilde forced him out of bounds on the four-yard line. Cox hit the line twice to take the sphere to the one-yard line as the third quarter came to a close.

Here Duke received another aid as the ardour of the 'Cats cooled in the minute interval. On the first play of the last period Cox plunged through for the winning touchdown. Cornelius again place-kicked the point after touchdown.

Still the 'Cats did not give up. Following an exchange of punts, they took the ball on their 27-yard line and with Pritchard, Kercheval, and Bach driving around the ends and through the line, and aided by passes, the 'Cats worked the ball to their opponent's 27-yard stripe. Then Pritchard crashed through Crawford again and into the clear but was tackled by the safety man for a 12-yard gain. With the ball on their 15-yard line the Devils took time out and drew five yards as a penalty for excessive time outs. Two smashes at the line lost three yards.

Game sent in Cassidy for Pritchard and on the next play Bach tossed him a pass but it was too long and "Schoe" was unable to reach it. Then Rupert went back and tossed a beautiful heave to
